LEI Presents Exciting Line-up of Speakers for LP National Convention

The Libertarian Education Institute hosting the 1991 Libertarian Party Presidential Nominating Convention is presenting a great line-up for libertarians and non-libertarians alike. Speaking on the main floor will be Joseph Sobran, syndicated columnist for National Review, on "From Conservative to Libertarian." Following him will be Richard Dennis, retired commodities broker, president of the Drug Policy Foundation, and publisher of New Perspectives Quarterly, who will speak on "From Liberal to Libertarian."

A panel discussing the Bill of Rights and the erosion of such rights will include Jarret Wollstein, member of the International Society for Individual Liberty; Nadine Strossen, president of the American Civil Liberties Union; Red Beckman, author and lecturer on tax resistance and grand-daddy of the Fully Informed Jury Amendment; and Bill Grossman, president of the Free Press Association, the organization that gives out the H. L. Mencken awards every year.

A panel discussing the Fully Informed Jury Association will include Larry Dodge, founder of FIJA and libertarian activist in Montana, and Red Beckman.

Richard Dennis along with Northwestern University professor, Daniel Polsby, will take part in a drug legalization debate against two unannounced foes.

Jack Herer, researcher, activist, and author of The Emperor Wears No Clothes will discuss libertarian activism, relating his experiences in trying to get a hemp legalization amendment on the ballot in California.

Larry Pratt, president of Gun Owners of America, will speak for the Thursday morning breakfast on the importance of the individual right to bear arms.

Karl Hess, editor emeritus of the LP News, author, lecturer, community organizer, and master welder, will host the Friday morning breakfast, speaking on Libertarian unity.

The Saturday morning brunch will be presented by the two announced Libertarian presidential candidates, Dick Boddie and Andre Marrou. They will discuss their visions of the future of the Libertarian Party.

Our own Joseph Bast, president of The Heartland Institute, will host a panel on educational choice.

Economist and Soviet defector, Yuri Maltsev, will speak on European capitalism.

NTUI president Jim Tobin will team up with financial advisor Mark Skousen for a tax-fighting panel.

Ron Paul will be present as a commentator for CSPAN, as well as introducing the Saturday night banquet LP nominee for President.

Workshops include FIJA, initiatives, campus activism, cable TV, marketing/fundraising.

WLS talk show host and libertarian, Stacy Taylor, will be the emcee for a good part of the convention.

CSPAN says it will supply gavel-to-gavel live coverage.

Other events rounding out the convention include a "Second City" presentation, a "Taste of Chicago", a Bill of Rights anniversary party, a Chicago Tour, and the lakefront Jazz Festival.

Add all the excitement on the floor including platform debates, election of national party officers, and the nomination for President of the United States, and the National Convention in Chicago becomes a can't miss proposition. See ad on page 5 for registration information.

Assault Weapons?

by Christopher Maxwell

For those not familiar with firearms, and not well informed about the state of current firearms law and the use of firearms in crime, the gun control issue can be confusing.

You may intellectually agree that disarming the public would remove the last resort of Government "accountability" available to the people, yet find your convictions wearing down after the latest gun control offensive. The advocates of gun control have emotional manipulation down to a science, and they do a great job of making their latest demand sound reasonable and necessary. The news media have supported this with a massive disinformation and brainwashing effort. This has fit very neatly with the entertainment media's love of "machine-guns," to give the public the impression that every street punk is equipped with the latest of hi-tech military weapons. The truth is, most violent crime is still committed with clubs and knives; firearms styled after modern military weapons make up an insignificant part of those firearms used to commit crimes.

If you aren't familiar with firearms you may have been led to believe that there is a definable class of firearms known as "assault weapons". Politicians and the news media have waged an hysterical campaign to convince the public that these weapons must be outlawed immediately. Yet no two politicians ever give the same definition of assault weapons when asked. This is not surprising if you understand that this is a political term, not a technical one. If they can pass this term into common usage, they can call any gun they want to ban an assault weapon. How can anybody disagree when there is no definition of the term?

"Assault rifle" is a military term for a rifle which fires a less powerful cartridge than a standard rifle and is capable of both semi-automatic (one shot with each pull of the trigger) and automatic (machine-gun) fire. Assault rifles are not available to the public. Replicas of some assault rifles, which are only capable of semi-automatic fire are legal to own. Despite the frightful appearance of some of these weapons, they are no more deadly than weapons which have been available since the beginning of the twentieth century.

Politicians, bureaucrats and the news media encourage you to believe these weapons are bad because they LOOK LIKE machine guns. The news media has been working for about five years to confuse the public to believe that "semi-automatic" means machine gun. They have been successful in this effort, partly through the use of trick film clips.

A common media tactic is to show an AR-15, a legal semi-automatic replica of the US Military M-16, on a gun-store rack, then cut to a firing range where a real automatic M-16 is being fired. The two different rifles look very much the same, so the unaware viewer is convinced that the corner gun store is selling machine guns to anybody who wants one.

Semi-automatic replicas of automatic weapons must be approved by BATF, to insure they cannot be easily converted to automatic fire. Anyone who has the skills and tools to convert a semi-automatic firearm to automatic fire could probably build a weapon from scratch.

Despite the "crisis", semi-automatic firearms are nothing new. Semi-automatic guns have been available in the United States since the 1896 Maser Broomhandle. Colt semi-automatic pistols, Remington and Winchester semi-automatic rifles and Browning semi-automatic shot-guns have been available since the first decade of the twentieth century. Why the sudden emergency?

We are told these weapons are used in "drive by shootings" and gang wars over sales territory. There is nothing new about these events either; they both happened during alcohol prohibition. The government's new prohibition, drugs, has brought these violent practices back again.

What we have here is the typical statist scam. One statist policy causes a problem, so instead of stopping what they did to cause the problem, they want to impose another statist solution, which increases the original problem.

When they have an excuse to tie the new "solution" to a longstanding statist goal such as total civilian disarmament, all the stops get pulled. This is why we are seeing such a bizarre coalition of leftist police administrators and statist politicians of every stripe working together to ban "assault weapons".

Banning all civilian firearms ownership is the goal of many politicians and government careerists. Laws against ill-defined "assault weapons" will be an important step toward that goal.

Chris Maxwell is doing gun outreach this year for the LPI, is a Viet Nam veteran, and our newly appointed corresponding secretary.

Gun Show Outreach

In the past two months, the LPI has continued its plan to outreach to gun owners in Illinois. Chris Maxwell has purchased tables at three gun shows, and Maggie Kohls and Ken Prazak has helped him man the tables. LPI literature earmarked for gun owners was passed out as well as information on FIJA. If you would like to help Chris in outreaching to gun owners, call him at 312-761-1716.

LIFBAC and LPI Chair Steve Reed are looking for candidates for US Senator, U. of I. Trustees, and any local office such as state rep, senator, or US House rep.

Leafletting on April 15

Ted Beckman, Glenn Olofsen, and Ken Prazak participated in the annual tax protest in front of the Chicago Main Post Office on the evening of April 15 along side war-tax protesters, members of NTUI, and the Scientologists. 1000 Libertarian leaflets were handed out that evening.

New Spectrum

Debbie Davis [letter, May 21] perpetuates the myth that the spectrum consists only of "conservative," "liberal" and "centrist." Readers should get beyond this left-right spectrum.

A new spectrum, conceived by David Nolan in the late '70s, plots a person's support for liberty along two axes—personal liberty (military draft, drug laws, homosexuality) on the vertical axis and economic liberty (free trade, farm subsidies, welfare) on the horizontal.

The more a person supports personal liberty, the higher he scores on the vertical axis; strong support for economic liberty moves a score higher on the horizontal axis.

Liberals appear in the upper left corner of the Nolan Chart, because they favor personal liberty but oppose economic liberty.

Conservatives appear in the lower right corner, because they favor economic liberty but oppose personal liberty.

Centrists appear where you would expect to see them—in the center.

The two new groups also appear on the Nolan Chart; authoritarians (who oppose both personal and economic liberty, and thus appear in the lower left corner) and libertarians (who favor personal and economic liberty, and thus appear in the upper right corner).

If you've wondered why the Democrats and Republicans appear to be more alike than different, the Nolan Chart helps explain why.

Both oppose a form of liberty; liberals oppose economic liberty, while conservatives oppose personal liberty.

Only libertarians favor liberty across-the-board and oppose government interference in the economic and personal lives of responsible individuals.

The Price We Pay to Live in a Police State

I work for a drug wholesaler as a receiver. I unload trucks and check in shipments of medical supplies and drugs including controlled substances.

Recently I discovered that a shipment of controlled drugs was short 13 cartons. Since then, I was interviewed by the D.E.A., and now the F.B.I. has been called in. They want to give me and some other workers polygraph tests.

I hope the authorities find those missing drugs, certainly before someone is hurt by them. On the other hand, I don't want to be hooked up to a machine manned by government agents with the authority to ask me any question they like and decide for themselves truth from fiction. I don't like the idea but I will likely submit to this intrusion because this is the only job I have and if I say "no" there may be repercussions.

It occurs to me that this is the way it happens, a little man giving up little bits of his freedom a piece at a time. This is the way it has happened in so many lands over so much of human history. Freedom is given up one little coerced incident at a time until one no longer lives in a free country!

They tell us that it is necessary for our own safety. If only we give more power to the state, if only we surrender the ability to defend ourselves... Of course, there is always the message from the dark side of our society: "Pleasure is bad for you."

Theft is wrong and drugs can hurt, but isn't this the way the Nazis and the Soviets justified their intrusions into liberty earlier in our century?

I want to live in a free country.
Robert Verran Jr., Oak Lawn, IL
