A PUBLICATION OF THE LIBERTARIAN PARTY OF COLORADO

Fall 2019

Volume 48, Issue 3

Chairman's Notes

Proud Libertarians of Colorado:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank board members, affiliate and development group leadership as well as activists for the hard work they have done in the past few months. Our Party depends on unpaid activists to achieve results.

Since the new board has been seated, we have had several accomplishments that could not have happened if the previous leadership had not set the foundation for our continued success.

I would like to thank our former Communications Director, Mr. Lance Cayko, for the work he did in making sure we kept up the following in our Facebook page, and for working with the writers in getting several articles a month published. I am very happy that Stacy Petty for stepping up and taking over as interim Communications Director after Mr. Cayko resigned from the position on September 9th.

I would like to thank Anthony Hale, previous outreach director for the willingness to put together several events. I am grateful for Brandon Wark for stepping in and taking over when the position became vacant. He is doing an outstanding job and booking new events and getting volunteers involved.

I would like to thank Mr. and Mrs. Harlos for the hard work they put in calling lapsed national members and thanks to that we went from #10 to # 8 in LNC memberships.

Thanks to Mr. Pickerill, Ms. Poague and Ms. Harlos for making sure we have content for the newsletter and for ensuring it is published regularly.

Thanks to Ms. Plummer for her work in getting the convention committee running and for making sure it runs smoothly.

We currently have 4 working affiliates and three active development groups. I am very grateful to the affiliate and DG leadership and am excited of what the future brings.

If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to email me at statechair@lpcolorado.org

Referendum C hurt TABOR; Prop CC will do more harm

By Jay Stooksberry

They lied to us in 2005, and they are doubling down on this lie in 2019. Colorado voters were sold a bill of goods with Referendum C in 2005, and it is of the utmost importance that we aren't fooled again with Proposition CC in 2019.

Proponents of Referendum C originally claimed that their measure was "temporary." The measure was supposed to offer a five-year reprieve from the constitutional limitations created by the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights (TABOR), allowing some fiscal flexibility for Colorado lawmakers to invest heavily in education and transportation.

Or so they claimed.

The National Convention is just around the corner, May 21-25. This year we will be nominating our candidate for the nation's highest office.

The Libertarian National Convention offers a variety of activities. From the very serious Presidential Debate to the funny and silly pie-throwing event, there is something for everyone. You can view seminars, participate in the parties, go to the Gala, meet candidates, and catch up with old friends without being a delegate, but why not become a delegate and have a say in the party's nominee for President?

If you are not a National dues paying member, you can help by becoming one. If you are a dues paying member, you can help by encouraging others to become National dues paying members.

Aside from the dangerous precedence of hitting pause on the Constitution, Referendum C proved to be anything but "temporary." The referendum allowed Colorado's spendthrift government to permanently augment its spending cap, shortchanging taxpayers on their potential refund year after year since its passing. After 2005, legislative budget reporting still references the "Referendum C cap" to distinguish it from the actual cap originally determined and allowed by TABOR's population-plus-inflation formula.

In addition to its disingenuous timetable, the ballot language of Referendum C misrepresented itself with its first three words: "Without raising taxes." Between 2005 and 2016, it is estimated that Referendum C greenlighted more than $17 billion in excess taxpayer revenue that would have been otherwise refunded to Coloradans. You don't have to read anybody's lips to know that paying more taxes — as opposed to being refunded what is rightfully yours — is a default tax increase.

Furthermore, Referendum C did not accomplish its stated goal of being a fiscal boon for education and transportation. As demonstrated by 2018's ballot measures to funnel even more money to schools and roads (i.e., Amendment 73 and Propositions 109 and 110), this hijacked revenue was still not enough to fund Colorado's education and transportation needs. Never mind the fact that state auditors reported that 80% of CDOT's budget couldn't be analyzed due to "accounting discrepancies."

Maybe — just maybe — Colorado doesn't have a revenue problem, but rather a spending problem. "Nah," said the Colorado General Assembly in 2018.

Instead, what is needed to fix this fiscal problem, according to state legislators, is to double down on this deception with the appropriately titled Proposition CC. If passed, this 2019 ballot measure would permanently abolish the state government's obligation to refund taxpayers. I repeat: permanently. At least this time around, legislators have dropped the pretense that they are bluffing with "temporary" half-measures; when it comes to keeping all of your hard-earned income, these legislators are going all-in, baby.

Fortunately, Colorado's robust economy is throwing a wrench into this plan. Three-year estimates of the excess revenue generated by Colorado taxes range from $1.2 to $1.5 billion, meaning that Colorado taxpayers will experience their first significant tax refund since the passing of Referendum C.

In politics, timing is everything, and Colorado lawmakers are quickly learning that 2019 is different than 2005. A 2019 poll shows that TABOR remains popular among Colorado voters. The poll, conducted by Baseline & Associates, Inc., revealed that 47% of respondents supported TABOR, while 26% opposed it. After a pollster read a statement that explained TABOR in greater detail, support spiked to 71%.

This combination of a sizable refund and polling has Colorado lawmakers shaking in their boots. Based on the failed attempt to convene a special session in hopes of brokering a deal, state lawmakers are anticipating CC to go down in flames.

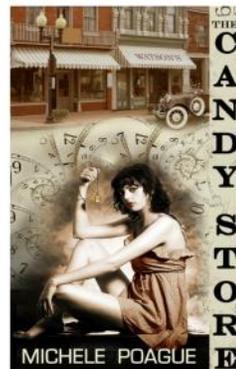

TABOR is, unfortunately, a shell of its former self. Its effectiveness has been chipped away by a decades-long rebranding campaign that laundered tax revenue by using terms like "fees" and "enterprises." Abusing these loopholes has allowed lawmakers to leapfrog the electorate, bypassing their constitutionally required approval to levy more taxpayer money.

Regardless, TABOR is still a vital, one-of-a-kind safeguard that empowers Coloradans against the wastefulness of government. Come November, let's be certain to keep it that way.

Fool us once with C, shame on you; fool us twice with CC, shame on all of us.

Colorado will be selecting its delegates to national at the 2020 State Convention scheduled for April 3-5, 2020. At the state convention, you will also have a chance to learn what is required of delegates.

Libertarian state conventions in Colorado are held once a year. This is our biggest and most powerful outreach tool of the year, both for creating new activists and for reaching out to our donors. Finding candidates for office, having fodder for media coverage, and having a place for Libertarians to gather are also benefits of an expanded convention - one with seminars, speakers, events, and parties. It showcases a party that is truly growing and is successful making it more likely for them to donate their time, energy, and money.

When planning a Libertarian Convention, whether state or national, we keep in mind the three 'E's of a convention:

Educate

Inform members about new laws, party successes, and other like-minded organizations. Provide seminars on libertarian philosophies, party practices, and activist training for those new to the party or those who have a passing interest in becoming part of the party.

Entice

A convention is a great place to entice members to step up their game, maybe run for a board position, become a candidate, or take a more activist role. It is a great place to encourage donors to go to the next level.

Energize

A large convention provides energy and excitement to donors, activists, and candidates. What better place to recharge than in a hotel lobby and hotel bar full of libertarians? Brainstorming with other libertarians in person can have a powerful encouraging and uplifting feeling.

A successful convention provides a means for the party to complete the business of the party without charge. It should have energy and excitement, have a large number of attendees and be invigorating to those who attend. Donations raised at the convention should be free of convention debt and used only for state party projects.

You are encouraged to attend the state convention so you can run for a delegate position. Worried about not having enough seats? With even a small increase in national membership, less than 300 new members, Colorado could increase the number of our delegates by over 50%.

While the purpose of a state convention is to do the business of the party, reviewing our founding documents and electing state board members and delegates to the national convention, adding seminars that entice people to attend creates an atmosphere of excitement and success. Having special events allows people to mingle and meet.

You see, there will be plenty to do even if you are not a state delegate.

BetteRose Ryan has been part of four successful state conventions and three successful national conventions with the help of people like Michele Poague, Eva Kosinski, Danial Hayes, Alicia Mattson, and others. The last state convention she and Michele Poague raised over $13K at the banquet for the state party.

George W. Bush's tax cuts and casting the only Senate Republican vote against authorizing the war in Iraq.

In 2006, Chafee lost the Senate seat to Democrat Sheldon Whitehouse, and he left the Republican Party to become an independent in 2007. Chafee endorsed Democrat Barack Obama in 2008, and when Chafee ran for governor as an independent in 2010, President Obama withheld his endorsement from Democrat Frank T. Caprio, prompting Caprio to say Obama could take his endorsement and "really shove it."

Now, Chafee is a member of the Libertarian Party. "They are against capital punishment, pro-choice, against war, strongly for the Fourth Amendment, no torture," he explained. "All these things that American has gotten away from."
